Description of Property and Justification: (Please attach map and photo)

Originally a public school building designed in 1878 by Baltimore architect Frank E. Davis, the Randallstown State Police Barracks is architecturally significant for embodying the characteristics of late Victorian Gothic style in its cruciform plan, its use of polychrome granite ashlar for the exterior and in the variety of additional construction materials used.

HARRISONVILLE PUBLIC SCHOOL, SCHOOL 9, DISTRICT 2

1877-79

Randallstown

Public (restricted access)

The present police barrack was adapted from a stone public school built on a lot acquired in 1878. It was an attempt on the part of the Baltimore County School Commissioners to get away from strictly functional buildings. Architect was Frank E. Davis and contractor was John C. Codling, as deduced from the minute books of the commissioners. The building is cruciform, with a gothic arch on the east end which frames the central windows. The school was sold off to a private citizen in 1927 and in 1932, it was purchased by the DMV to use as a police station: at that time, a number of dormers were added to provide sleeping quarters and other changes were made. In 1979, the structure was found to be within the take-lines of a project to widen Liberty Road.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The former Harrisonville schoolhouse is a small sturdy building in cruciform layout, built of granite ashlar, with slate roofing and a number of dormers added to adapt it to later uses. The entrance facade is the end of the building facing east. Entrance is by doors on either side of this facade, but located in the two shorter wings.

Style is functional or vernacular, but the architect allowed himself one touch of Gothic in the main facade, where a pair of sash windows is framed in a very heavy pointed stone arch that projects out from the building and cantilevers to support a small section of roofing. The gable ends of the main facade and of the south wing are filled in with clapboard. On the main facade, the clapboarding forms a background for the arched window and its small gable roof.

In this century, the original space was expanded by adding a number of dormers; there is a long shed-roofed dormer on the north side and three gable-roofed dormers on the south side. Side walls of the dormers are sheathed in slate. The school was built with 6-over-6 double-hung sash windows along the sides, but with taller and narrower windows on the main facade. Some window openings have been filled in: the south wing of the cross has been fitted with very small windows and is apparently a lavatory.

This police station stands just west of a commonplace shopping center but was only a few years ago in an isolated and rural setting. The station is on a triangle of land and the grounds east of the building are neatly kept in grass. There are good quality suburban houses on the southside of Liberty Road opposite.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The present police barrack is an adapted schoolhouse and its construction represented an attempt on the part of the Board of School Commissioners to plan schools with customized designs, breaking away from the stereotyped schoolhouse plans adopted only 18 years before.

The Commissioners' annual report for the year 1878 stated:

To Mary J. Phillips $230 for three fourths of an acre at the intersection of Deer Park Road and the Liberty Turnpike. A contract is in perfection for the erection of a stone house on this lot to take the place of the one now rented for School 9, District 2. (1)

Land records show that the lot was acquired on July 16, 1878. (2) The board's minutes book reveals that the decision had been made at their meeting of July 9:

On motion it was ordered that the Board lease from Mary J. Phillips a lot of ground containing about three fourths of an acre for the use of School 9, District 2, that the sum to be paid for said lot shall be two hundred and fifty dollars. and the ground rent one cent, and that said lot shall be restricted to and for the use of School purposes only and for white children and that Thos. G. Ruttledge be appointed Attorney in fact to acknowledge the Lease. (3)

Every school had a number within its election district. and this one was School 9, District 2. Any school's progress can be followed through the minutes book by the numbers versus bills submitted for services. All the schools of this period were designed by Frank E. Davis, and he was paid $56 for the design of a stone school at a meeting of 1879. The only contractor mentioned in connection with School 9, District 2, is John Q. Codling. (4) Davis, admitted to the A.I.A. in 1870, was the designer of the Odd Fellows Hall at Saratoga and Cathedral Streets, Baltimore (1891): as a member of Davis & Davis, he was co-designer of the Fifth Regiment Armory.

And in 1885. the Board looked back on a period of active school construction, reporting:

During the past decade much more has been expended on school houses. Substantial brick or stone buildings now replace the old time frame shells which were as a rule miserably located and built. These houses need only to be seen to be known forever thereafter. They are all fashioned after the same plan, if such it may be called, and a vestibule 4 by 6 feet for an entrance is, the only thing to relieve them from being mistaken for a barn or stable. In this age of progress the schools should be in the van. School houses should be substantial, ornamental and commodious; they should be located on the most central and desirable sites to be found in their respective neighborhoods: the play grounds attached should be ample and should be separated for the two sexes, so as to make them entirely private; they should be supplied with comfortable furniture and be properly ventilated, heated, and lighted: in fact a good school house, to be attractive, should have all the comforts and conveniences of a good house. (10)

Every school had a trio of local trustees, and at No. 9, District 2, they were Thomas C. Worthington, Thomas Handley, and William Griffin. Tables in annual reports list teachers at all the 152 schools, and first shown at No. 9 was Ellen Turner, who had 37 pupils "on roll" for the fall term. (11) The 1881 report showed Ellen T. Chapman (presumably Ms. Turner after marriage) and George Harrison. (12) In the opening year the school ran up the following expenses:

Teacher's Salary	$530.80/annum
Fuel	26.75
Rent	60.00
Furniture, black boards, stoves	150.99
Cost of books	57.25 (13)

The age was indeed a modern one, for in 1873, the board had reported:

There has been but one change in our booklist during the year-- the substitution of the "New American Readers" for "McGuffeys" series. (14)

Each annual report carried a sample school exam, filled with words to spell: scientific terms and Greek personalities; staggering algebra problems riddled with radical signs and parentheses; and a quiz on "philosophy" including the questions, "What is matter," and "What is the hydrostatic process?" Probably no American school administrator of 1979 could answer such a barrage of stumpers.

In 1916, the school system was reorganized and the commissioners conveyed all their accumulated property to the Board of Education. With the arrival of automobiles and busses, the scattered local schools began to yield to the "consolidated" school, and in 1927, Harrisonville School was closed and the board sold it to a local resident, Eleanor P. Isaac, who served as a straw-party to convey to Eleanor P. Passano. (15) Ms. Passano held the property for five years and in 1932 sold to the State of Maryland, Department of Motor Vehicles. (16) The building became a barrack and local station of the Maryland State Police and still serves that function. Various surveys for changes to Liberty Road have caused concern as to the fate of this building, once the high-priced, monumental school of Baltimore County's capable and ambitious school managers.

John E. A. Cunningham was paid $150.99 for "Furnishing Sch. 9, Dist. 2." in July of 1879. (5)

Late in the same year, the board reported:

The application for curtains for School 9 District 2 was referred to the Secretary, Thos. C. Bruff with power to act, and the erection of outbuildings for same School was referred to W. M. Isaac with power to act. (6)

The annual report announced in 1879 that:

School 9, District 2, is near Harrisonville. For a number of years, School was held in a damp basement rented for the purpose. The house, though expensive, is one of the most complete one-room buildings in the State, and will stand as a monument to the untiring energy of its originators. (7)

The same report shows that the contract price was $3,825.00 and that some $2,325.00 had been paid before the end of the fiscal year, which ended September 30. (8)

Baltimore County had been authorized to set up a school system by the General Assembly in 1848 and a citizen board founded new schools and took over locally incorporated "academies." Schools were mentioned in reports as struggling along in converted corncribs, private dwellings, and a warehouse basement. Board minutes reveal that some church halls were used as schools under lease arrangements. A standardized set of school designs by Thomas J. Dixon had been adopted in 1860, but apparently fell into disfavor as the board became more affluent. Possibly Dixon's fame in designing two nearby jails cast an unfortunate association over his plain and practical type of school.

Only a year before building at Harrisonville, the Board boasted in its annual report:

In constructing school houses, the architecture has been greatly improved. They are no longer built of the roughest materials without symmetry or design, and stuck in some remote corner of the school district, but the most desirable and convenient sites are selected, upon which substantial houses, neat in design, ornamental in appearance with all the modern improvements, are erected. Considerable attention has been given to ventilating, heating and lighting. The school rooms are so arranged that the pupils sit at their desks without having a glare of light blinding their eyes. The temperature can be reduced and impure air removed, without opening windows and doors—a method of ventilation fruitful only of colds and doctors' bills. (9)

And in 1885, the Board looked back on a period of active school construction, reporting:

During the past decade much more has been expended on school houses. Substantial brick or stone buildings now replace the old time frame shells which were as a rule miserably located and built. These houses need only to be seen to be known forever thereafter. They are all fashioned after the same plan, if such it may be called, and a vestibule 4 by 6 feet for an entrance is, the only thing to relieve them from being mistaken for a barn or stable. In this age of progress the schools should be in the van. School houses should be substantial, ornamental and commodious; they should be located on the most central and desirable sites to be found in their respective neighborhoods; the play grounds attached should be ample and should be separated for the two sexes, so as to make them entirely private; they should be supplied with comfortable furniture and be properly ventilated, heated, and lighted; in fact a good school house, to be attractive, should have all the comforts and conveniences of a good house.
